David Eisner is chief executive officer of the Corporation for National and Community Service. He was appointed by President Bush and began serving in December 2003. Eisner has focused on strengthening the corporation's accountability, improving customer service, and increasing public trust. From 1997 until 2003, Eisner was a vice president at AOL Time Warner, where he directed the company's charitable foundation. Before that, he was a senior vice president of Fleishman-Hilliard International Communications and managed public relations at the Legal Services Corp. He began his career on Capitol Hill, serving as press secretary for three members of Congress. A graduate of Stanford University, Eisner received his law degree from Georgetown University Law Center. He and his wife, Lori, live in Bethesda, Md., with their four children.

William A. Galston is the Saul I. Stern professor of civic engagement and the director of the Institute for Philosophy and Public Policy at the University of Maryland. Galston was deputy assistant to the president for domestic policy during the first Clinton administration and executive director of the National Commission on Civic Renewal. He has served as director of economic and social programs at the Roosevelt Center for American Policy Studies in Washington, as chief speech writer for John Anderson's presidential campaign, as issues director for Walter Mondale's presidential campaign, and as senior adviser to Al Gore during his run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988. Since 1995, Galston has served as a founding member of the Board of the National Campaign to Prevent Teen Pregnancy and as chairman of the campaign's Task Force on Religion and Public Values.

Stephen Goldsmith is chairman of the Manhattan Institute's Center for Civic Innovation, and the Daniel Paul professor of government
